

Sample Interview Questions for Jennifer Gresham

1. Maybe they call it work for a reason. Is it realistic to think you can have a career that you love, especially in this economy?
2. Can anyone make the switch? Are some people better set up than others?
3. How do you help people deal with the fear of making such a big change?
4. Are there common misconceptions people have about career change?
5. How do you know if your new career is going to be any more enjoyable than your last one?
6. You say that "anti-passions" are just as important as "passions" when designing one's next career. What are anti-passions and how do you use them?
7. You often talk about "designing" a career, as opposed to just career change. What do you mean by that?
8. A lot of people assume they have to go back to school to get a degree in their new field before changing careers. You say that's a terrible idea. Why? What should they do instead?
9. What about those who are currently unemployed? What can they do to use this time as an opportunity for reinvention?
10. What's your number one tip for someone thinking about changing careers?